

PROFILE

Richard Mendelsohn Leadership Management Australia, Victoria

Richard Mendelsohn joined Leadership Management Australia (LMA), following a career of over 40 years in many diverse roles in the military (RAAF), Federal Government and the Corporate sector.

Most of Richard's career has been spent in management and leadership roles, starting out as a team leader, progressed through a number of middle and senior management roles in Australia to eventually take up a Senior Executive role at one of Europe's largest telecommunications company. Richard joined LMA in 2003 as a Melbourne based Licensee to pursue his passion of creating high performing individuals and teams. LMA's approach to developing people and teams resonated with Richard from his first introduction to the organisation; when he began to immerse himself in what LMA does, he could not help but think, "...if only I knew about all this when I was a manager!"

Based on this realisation, Richard's aim is to make organisations and managers aware of what is possible through the LMA people development approach. Because of his diverse experience across many organisations and roles, Richard's key strength is an ability to relate with anyone operating at any level of responsibility within their company. Regardless of the role they are performing or the challenges they are experiencing, Richard have either observed it or experienced it myself. This enables him to connect and engage at a meaningful level and work more effectively with his clients to help them achieve their goals.

Richard has an enduring belief that the clients he has introduced to the LMA people development approach have all become better off, in both their work and personal life, through that experience. According to Richard, "It is incredibly rewarding attending a Graduation workshop and hear your participants talk about the positive difference LMA has made to them, their team, and their family".
